Digital Army to Launch Censorship-Free Platform for Truth-Seekers

Army of Internet Soldiers hopes to expand reach with new venture

After recently investing over $2 million to purchase equipment to build a full-scale production studio and team, Digital Army is pleased to announce they are getting ready to launch a new kind of news network. The news presented by Digital Army aims to present facts and ask the right questions, without using insulting language, fighting, forcing opinions, or making claims.

Digital Army has spent the last three years working alongside the “Great Awakening” to develop a foundation for change. They have used a portion of the initial investment to acquire a number of brands spanning all industries, purchased additional equipment to support these brands, and made the necessary strategic partnerships to get things started.

All funds collected through Digital Army will be put back into the building of the army. All those who have taken the oath may be selected for ownership (or representation) in their hometown as Digital Army expands region to region state to state developing oath takers for a variety of industries.

Monetization will occur after elections, via brands that are built and funded by digital soldiers. These digital soldiers will be given ownership of the developed brands and supported by the Digital Army worldwide.

In addition to brands being developed for and by oath takers, Digital Army plans to work hand-in-hand with the U.S. government to ensure survivors of sex trafficking, child trafficking, and drug trafficking receive assistance for food and housing, as well as develop the skills needed to make the rest of their lives the best of their lives.

Digital Army started as a few “digital soldiers” (primarily first responders, RNs, NPs, and MDs) inspired by messages they had seen published by online truth-seekers. Today, the group is 200+million digital soldiers strong. The mission of Digital Army is to create a platform their community can organize and develop together, without the worry of censorship. A community that brings together their strengths and utilizes their leverage.

Digital Army presents the question to all those within mainstream media who have taken the oath (anchors, reporters, producers, directors, camera operators, etc.): are you ready to help develop a real news network for the people by the people?
